Common Sense Categories

An easier method for elementary and middle school students to find books

An independent interview with Brenda Bertino, Learning Resource Center Director, Troy School District

Troy Community Consolidated School District 30-C is located in Will County, the fastest growing county in Illinois. The Pre-K through Grade 8 school district consists of five elementary schools (grades Pre-K through 4th grade), one intermediate school (5th and 6th grades), and one middle school (7th and 8th grades).

Brenda Bertino serves as the Learning Resource Center Director for the school district, and is the district's only certified Media Specialist. Associates manage the Learning Resource Centers and assist teachers and students in utilizing the Centers' print and non-print resources.

In her position with the Troy School District, Bertino visited schools to understand how the library staff worked with kids. In one of her early encounters she quickly realized that school libraries were not organized to help kids find what they were looking for. She thought there had to be a better way to organize books by categories in school libraries, but her research didn't find any other classification system that would serve her purpose.

And so she created her own—Common Sense Categories (CSC). Like Dewey, CSC organizes books by subject. But, unlike Dewey, the organization, categories and subcategories are based on specific grade level curriculum for each building, which puts the students at the center of the organization process.

Bound to Stay Bound steps in

In 2015, Bertino was introduced to Lori Smith at Bound to Stay Bound (BTSB). Bertino explained the philosophy behind CSC and the challenge of converting each school manually.

Bertino had talked with several vendors about providing shelf-ready books with CSC labels but had been told it wasn't possible, or, if the vendor was willing to try, they couldn't get it right. "But BTSB was different. They said they could do it and would do it."

Bertino agreed to a trial of thirty books with BTSB. The books were delivered in two weeks, and BTSB customer service staff even found two errors that Brenda didn't catch. "Their attention to detail was very impressive," she says. "I'd selected a book on cranes sight unseen and, assuming it was the flying type of crane, assigned it to a category about birds. But the BTSB folks caught the error and correctly identified the category as construction, based on the actual book. I was amazed at this level of service."

"Anyone who is changing their classification system should look at BTSB for their quality, responsiveness, and customer service. I wish I'd found BTSB seven years ago!"

Benefits of working with Bound to Stay Bound

Bertino says all the schools in the district have been converted to CSC. Small projects will continue to be done but now all books ordered through BTSB arrive shelf-ready, eliminating manual processing. When asked about the benefits of working with BTSB, Bertino has no difficulty highlighting the differences she's noticed in just a few months.

- Books come shelf-ready to their specifications. Bertino says the BTSB website makes it very easy to order exactly what she needs.

- Speed of delivery. "BTSB ships directly from their warehouse so their turnaround time is much faster than our previous suppliers," Bertino says. Since the books arrive shelf-ready, the time from order placement to on the shelves is weeks not months.

- Responsiveness. Bertino is still amazed that BTSB could do what others could not. "They were willing to listen to what we wanted. They understood our goals and put forth the effort to meet our needs, customizing labels as needed for each of our schools. BTSB said they could do it and they did."

- Customer service. Bertino says BTSB is very customer-service oriented. "They answer the phone and they know who I am—I'm not just a number. They pay close attention to detail and question something if it doesn't make sense. I like that they're watching out for me."

Bertino plans to retire in June 2016. When she does she's confident she is leaving behind a system that works for educators, library staff, and — above all — for kids. Now that reclassification can be done in a way that is not labor-intensive, she's even more convinced that Common Sense Categories make sense for elementary, intermediate, and middle school libraries.

As word has gotten around about the work in the Troy School District, Bertino has been contacted by others interested in converting their schools. Bertino is happy to share what she's learned.

And, she says, "Anyone who is changing their classification system should look at BTSB for their quality, responsiveness, and customer service. I wish I'd found BTSB seven years ago!"

MR BROWN GOES WILD

There's something wild about author and illustrator Peter Brown. Whether enjoying the stealthy charm of Creepy Carrots or reveling in the incremental freedom portrayed in Mr. Tiger Goes Wild, Peter's muse seems to most often occupy that place between civilization and the natural world. In his first novel, Peter views this tension from an entirely new angle that is sure to captivate young readers.

Peter's muse seems to most often occupy that place between civilization and the natural world.

"Sometimes a story idea is perfect for a picture book—short and kind of quick, a universal idea—sometimes you want to dig a little deeper," explains the author. "I had this idea about an unnatural character finding harmony in nature that seemed like an interesting fish out of water story." The seed for The Wild Robot was planted during his work on The Curious Garden, as he explored wild things living in surprising places. "It got me thinking about the opposite scenario," he recalls, "and the most industrial thing I could imagine was a robot."

The Wild Robot did not have a quick gestation, though. "Once I had the idea for a robot finding harmony in nature, I could not shake it," Peter remembers. Yet he did not want to rush and questioned whether he should attempt writing a novel in the first place. For five years, he did research and noted inspiring ideas for his wild robot story. The new novelist confides that "I had this giant well to draw from—it was a little overwhelming." Peter explains that the hardest part of writing The Wild Robot was finishing it. "I kept thinking I could make it better if I had more time, but then I would run the risk of it being not as fresh."

Now that The Wild Robot is in the world and not just in Peter Brown's fertile brain, it has become the property of its readers. Peter recently spoke to a middle grade book club in Brooklyn and was struck by the different ways kids respond to the book. "At one point a girl asked how would the story have worked if two robots had survived the crash in the opening chapter. "The more I thought about it, the more I realized how smart the question was—it would have changed everything." The first-time novelist was especially pleased that kids were analyzing the story so thoroughly and asking such insightful questions.

But Peter Brown's expertise with words is not a new discovery and his ability to communicate with both words and pictures has won him many kudos. As an author/illustrator he can make art notes for himself and uses very little action and description in his text. "I only use words when I can't show something clearly with pictures." And sometimes he doesn't need any words at all. He notes that reading a picture book aloud is its own art form and that art needs to be discussed. Near the end, a wordless page spread shows Mr. Tiger walking on all four legs and he asks the kids why they think he chose to leave the storytelling to the picture alone. "They see that it's a quiet moment for Mr. Tiger and that it can be a quiet moment for the reader as well."

Whether communicating with words or pictures or both, it's clear that Mr. Brown is wildly talented.

FEATURED AUTHOR TOM ANGLEBERGER

It seems that robots are everywhere on the fictional landscape these days so why shouldn't a robot be in school? In Fuzzy, beloved Origami Yoda creator Tom Angleberger teams up with his buddy Paul Dellinger—who just happens to be a best-selling science fiction writer—to tell the story of Vanguard Middle School which happens to be run by a super-computer named Vice Principal Barbara, an experimental robot named Fuzzy and a young robotics whiz named Max, who is selected to show Fuzzy the ropes.

Tom and Paul worked together at a newspaper many years ago where they once did a comic adaptation. When Paul retired, Tom suggested they work on something together. "I love sci-fi but was not comfortable plunging into it," he confides. "Our first idea for a story was that someday there will be a robot who goes to school and how will people react?"

Tom's varied job history includes a stint in a lawn mower factory and even then he remembers, "off in a corner, they were building a machine to replace us." Perhaps that memory fueled the co-authors' query of where else could robots go? The successful children's book author had the perfect place. Tom adds that "Paul would never have thought of writing about middle school and I would never have written a story about a robot."

Fans of Origami Yoda and Tom's other books may be surprised that while there is a lot of humor, it's not, as the author says, "a yukkity yuk" book. At the same time, "it's not a science fictiony world." Tom and Paul worked on the book and somewhere around Year Seven, Tom realized how much Fuzzy and young people have in common: "They feel like everything is programmed and they are pushed around and there are all these expectations and they are trying to figure out what is really you and what is not." He goes on to say that "if the book had been published in the first year, it would not have been nearly as good." When they came up with the idea that someone would want to steal this multi-million-dollar robot, they had the beginnings of their plot.

Collaboration is not new for Tom Angleberger and the popular Inspector Flytrap series with Cece Bell represents a marriage that is successful on the page and off. "I was just amazed at Cece's art—it's easy to write something like 'Emu chases Flytrap on a skateboard' and she just nails the illustration for it. She had the crazy idea to do the mini-comics and those are absolutely bonkers and I love them."

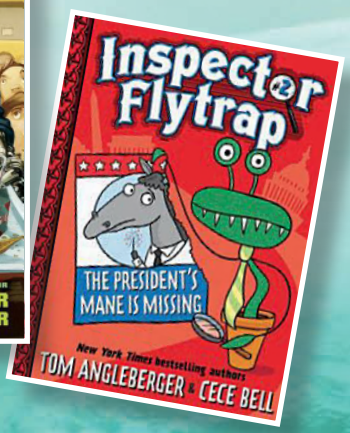

Tom also loves Star Wars. He saw the first film at the age of six and devoured the action figures. At the same time, he also loved doing origami and never thought to put them together—"except maybe an X-wing," he adds—until he saw origami yoda on the internet. He made a simple one himself, showed Cece and one idea led to another. "Before I knew it, I got hooked up to an editor and we had a giant six-book story to tell," remembers Tom. With a disarming laugh, he adds, "The force was with me."

Yuyi Morales: Yay for Yuyi!

Yuyi Morales no longer accepts manuscripts to illustrate. She prefers to illustrate her own stories. Sherman Alexie is the exception these days. "Sherman has been one of the authors I admire most!" Those are not idle words—she and her son have shared True Diary of a Part-time Indian with many friends.

"I had to make sure I could do a good job," she recalls. Thunder Boy Jr. presented the illustrator with some significant challenges and she "needed to understand both how the story resonated with Sherman and also how it resonated with me." As is usually the case, the author and illustrator did not have direct communication. Yuyi confides, "I wanted to be very careful." One line of text that especially inspired her was "I dreamed my mom and my dad were the sun and the moon."

"I know I can be overenthusiastic," laughs Yuyi. "I know each illustration needs to have all the right elements and that it involves research as well as creativity." Her instinct was to make the sun paternal and moon maternal. "I asked my editor to check with Sherman to see if this is something I could use—I try not to fall into portraying things in a stereotypical way (even with good intentions)." When he replied that his people are called the People of the Sun, she knew she was on the right track. It was confirmed when Sherman later commented on Thunder Boy Jr.'s bright yellow overalls— "for him they were right because he was a child of the sun."

There is a sort of alchemy that happens when Yuyi Morales takes on a project. Her approach of research and resonance is readily apparent in her picture book rhapsodies on the artists Frida Kahlo and Georgia O'Keeffe. Those looking for straightforward autobiography will not find it in Viva Frida. Readers seeking both an appreciation and unique insight into the distinctive artist will be uniquely rewarded. "It's more an exploration of how I am influenced by Frida," explains Yuyi. What we see in Viva Frida is how the artist Yuyi Morales connects with the artists Frida: "I know I'm looking at a piece of a mirror and those things that I love mean there is something that can create in me as well." She adds, "We all look, and play, and dream, and that is part of the creative process."

That openness to the world and playful spirit in her art give her illustrations an irresistible relevance. It's hard to imagine that she will not continue to be honored. It's equally difficult not to think that the story of her first experience in a U.S. library won't figure in a future speech. "The library became my home when I emigrated to San Francisco. It welcomed me," she remembers. "I did not speak the language yet but I could just be there in books. It became our place of discovery." She also deeply appreciated that "librarians made such an effort to engage me and recommend books for me and allow me to be there," she notes. Yuyi's confidence and interest grew and soon the children's librarian was lending her The Horn Book. "I know you'll be back tomorrow," the librarian told her with a smile.

Yuyi's works now can be found in that collection and countless more as the evidence of her inspiration, talent, and playfulness spreads.

That openness to the world and playful spirit in her art give her illustrations an irresistible relevance.

GREG NERI and the Gateway to Reading

Greg Neri keeps his eyes and ears open because he never knows when he may stumble across a story. "Real life is far more interesting than anything I can make up—my one talent is my ability to spot a great story." Consider just a few years ago when the actor Philip Seymour Hoffman died. Like many fans, Neri sought out his work. As he watched Capote, "I became fascinated by the idea that two of our greatest writers grew up together in the middle of nowhere." So when he started to dip into their early lives, "what popped up was entertaining, outrageous, and poignant." He could not believe that no one had written about young Truman Capote and Nelle Harper Lee before, especially for young people. That was the idea that sparked Neri's critically-acclaimed middle grade novel, Tru & Nelle.

A project that had a much longer gestation period was Neri's picture book biography Hello, I'm Johnny Cash. "Each project has its own voice and flavor," notes Neri, and he likes to "bounce back and forth between novels, and graphic novels and free verse and poetry. Just like Johnny's songs about epic folk heroes, Neri wanted to tell the singer's story in a way that honored his voice. It took Neri ten years to figure out just how to do the story.

Many books have a life of their own and Ghetto Cowboy is Neri's book that "everyone wants to hear about." The true story of inner-city kids and the horses they love and care for inspired Neri's novel. As he talks to kids about Ghetto Cowboy, Neri revels in how they respond to the story behind the story. "I talk about how this is a real place, that these things actually happened." He did not know when he wrote the book that the Philadelphia program that intrigued him can be found all over the country including St. Louis, Houston, Brooklyn, and even Los Angeles.

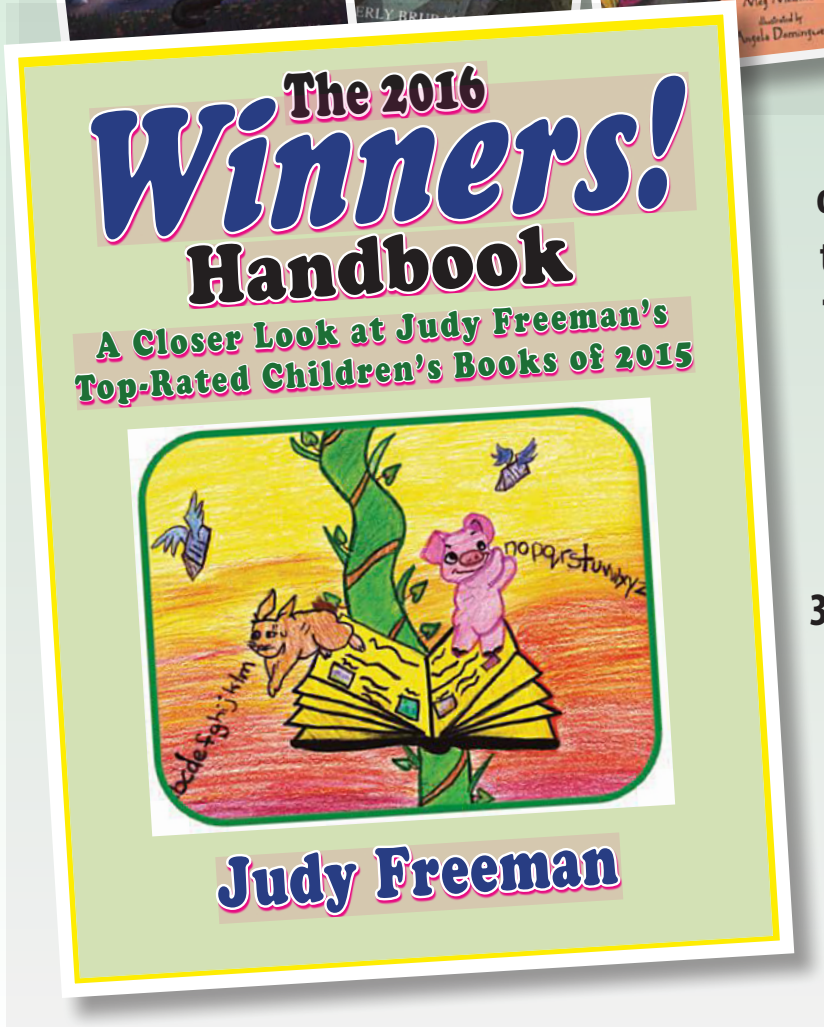

Neri's books are often the gateway books for kids who don't want to read. An inspired librarian handed a copy of Chess Rumble to reluctant-reader, trouble-prone fifth-grade Raquon. After a time, he picked up the book and realized it had cool pictures. And the free verse text was something he could read and respond to. "Not only did he read it, but he understood it and liked it," recalls Neri. Soon, he had finished the book and asked the librarian for another book like that. He kept going until he had read all the library's poetry section. "Then, he asked the librarian if she had any books by that guy Shakesperry," Neri remembers. The librarian learned that Raquon was writing his own poetry, and urged him to share it with his teachers. From that time on, "Raquon became a person, not a problem" as the teachers grew to understand him. When Raquon auditioned for the creative arts high school, the first person he told about his acceptance was G. Neri. He just graduated and is now heading to college—a path that opened to him when a thoughtful librarian handed him a G. Neri book. "My books are more than just stories—there's a possibility that it might open someone's head."

Revitalize your collection with S.O.S. Library from BTSB!

S.O.S. Library is BTSB's free, easy-to-use web service that allows communities, families, and businesses to donate online toward your school library.

Best of all ... it's risk free.

Want more information? Visit us online at www.btsb.com/soslibrary or call our customer support staff at (800) 637-6586.

Common Core standards made easy with BTSB

BTSB cataloging experts look at publisher recommendations, carefully analyze each title and match it to the appropriate grade level, classification and theme of the national standards, making it easier than ever to choose books for your collection.

It's easy to start your search! Just go online to www.btsb.com/search/curriculum/ or select "Common Core" under BTSB's Search menu.

Need more Common Core help? Bound to Stay Bound has you covered. Visit http://www.btsb.com/services/common-core/ to see video resources.

Duplicate Title Check

Keep your collection organized and ensure against duplicate titles with DupCheck from Bound to Stay Bound.

Once you've activated the feature, a stoplight will appear to the left of each title in your search results. These stoplights indicate which results are already in your collection.

- Red — The title is in your collection.
- Yellow — A possible match has been found.
- Green — The title is not in your collection.

Contact BTSB Customer Support at btsb@btsb.com or call us at (800) 637-6586 for help uploading your MARC records to activate your DupCheck.

Curriculum Supportive Lists

Expand your school library into a place where librarians, teachers and students can quickly access books to facilitate the instruction of curriculum standards.

BTSB lists have been assembled for grades K through 8 with the help of a professional literacy coach. Texts are selected based on Reading Literature Standards and Reading Informational Standards. Titles will help library professionals and teachers coordinate their collections to meet standards such as Common Core, TEKS, and more!
